

BEWARE of the Jalapeños and the Chiles:

Mexican food is not for the faint of stomach.

Consisting of such flavorsome ingredients such as tortillas, chili peppers, and beans; the richness and spiciness of Mexican cuisine is only for those brave of heart.

Mexican food is one cuisine that will always have a taste and “sabor” (flavor) that is unique to Mexico. Present day, it is a mixture of original Mayan and Aztec cuisine combined with the influence of the culture of the Spanish conquistadores. Mexican food is known for its wealth of spices and intense, deep flavoring.

This rich and diversified cuisine varies in reference to the region it is coming from or being made in. Northern style Mexican food normally consists of dishes with a lot of beef, while southern-style Mexican cuisine consists more of chicken and vegetables such as bell pepper, radishes, and broccoli, more than anything else.

More indigenous areas have even been known to incorporate spider monkey and iguana into their meals - don't worry, these are not ingredients in our dishes.
