THE SECRET IS OUT.

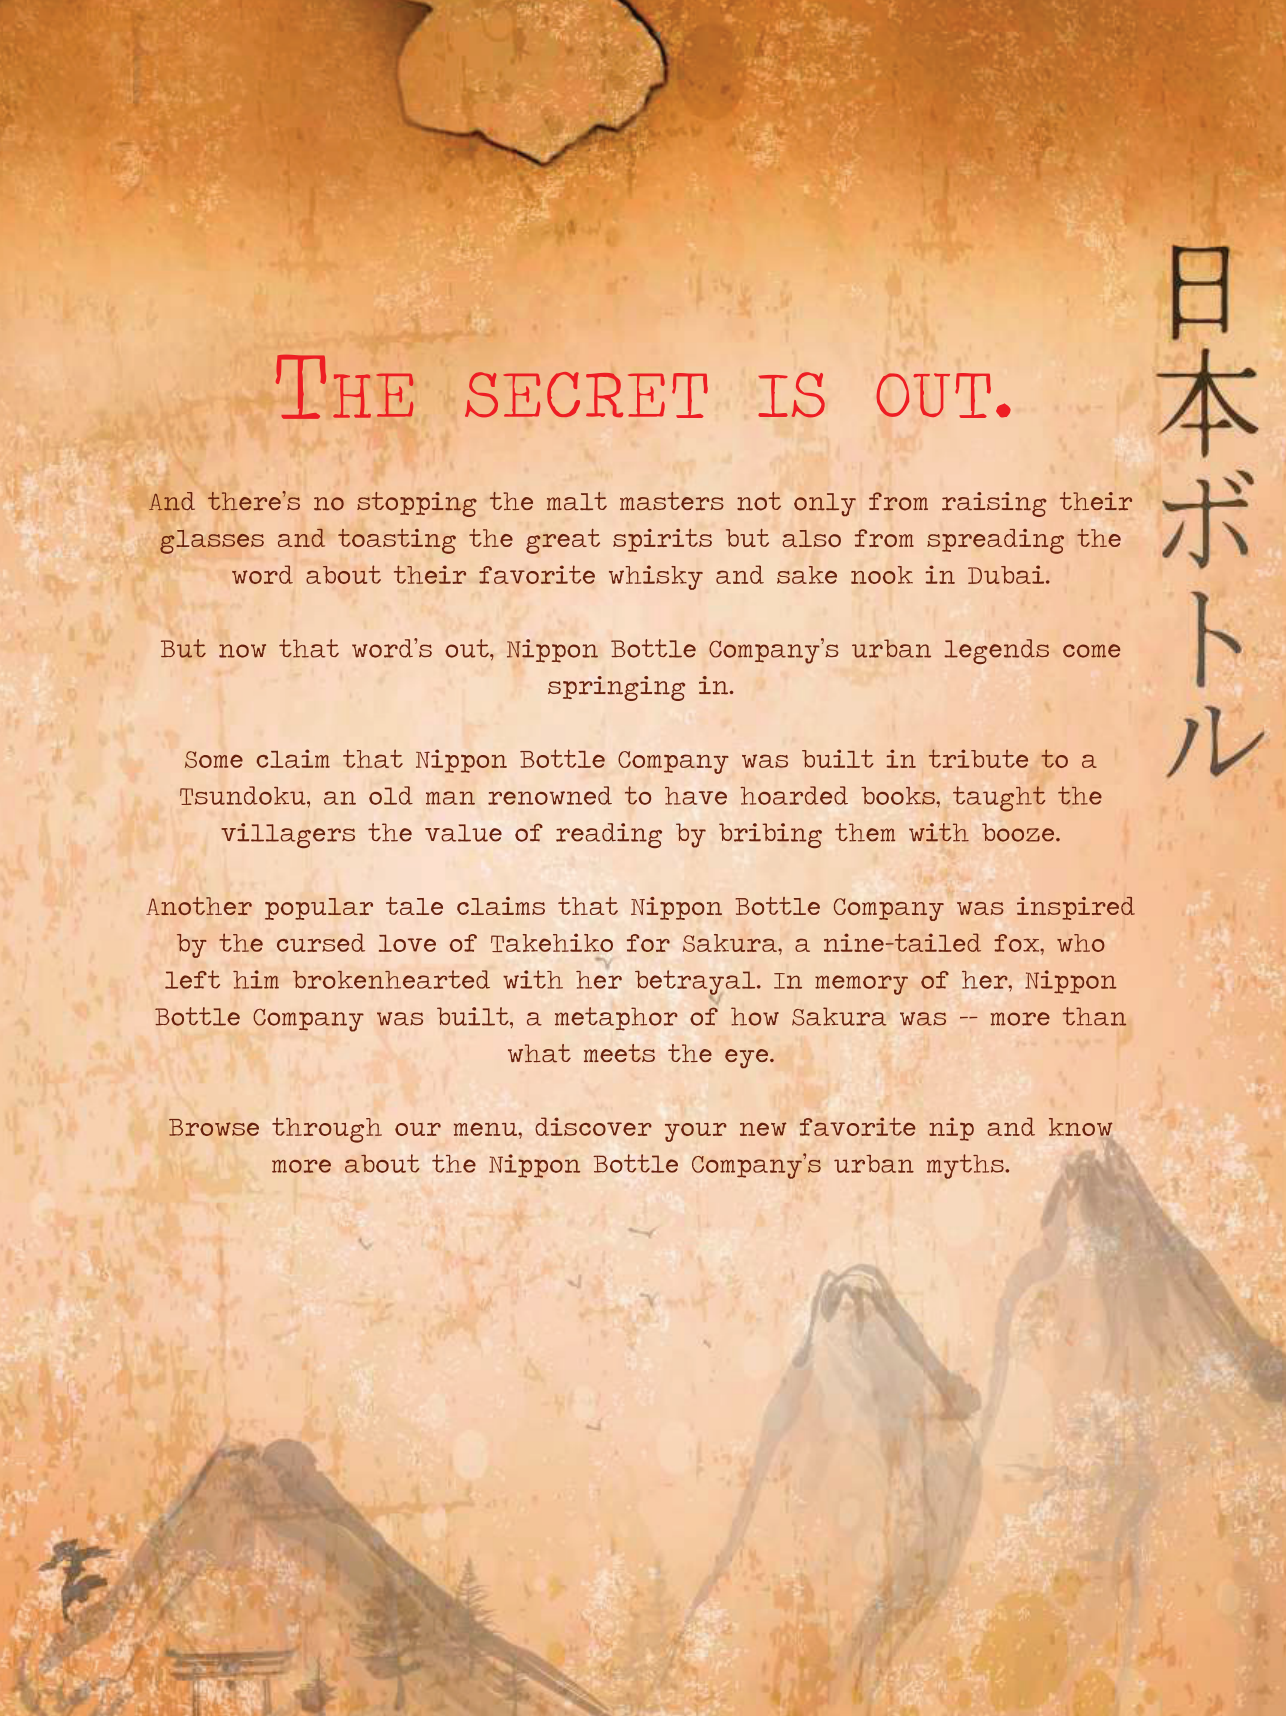

And there's no stopping the malt masters not only from raising their glasses and toasting the great spirits but also from spreading the word about their favorite whisky and sake nook in Dubai.

But now that word's out, Nippon Bottle Company's urban legends come springing in.

Some claim that Nippon Bottle Company was built in tribute to a Tsundoku, an old man renowned to have hoarded books, taught the villagers the value of reading by bribing them with booze.

Another popular tale claims that Nippon Bottle Company was inspired by the cursed love of Takehiko for Sakura, a nine-tailed fox, who left him brokenhearted with her betrayal. In memory of her, Nippon Bottle Company was built, a metaphor of how Sakura was -- more than what meets the eye.

Browse through our menu, discover your new favorite nip and know more about the Nippon Bottle Company's urban myths.
